

More than 15 Million Households Expected to Camp in July

Press Release Date: July 26, 2022

Kampgrounds of America's Monthly Research Report projects that camping will remain popular during volatile economic conditions.

BILLINGS, Mont. (July 26, 2022) – The KOA Monthly Research Report – July Edition projects that 15.93 million households will camp in July – a number similar to 2021 – though some admit changing plans due to economic factors. Following the release of Kampgrounds of America, Inc.'s (KOA) annual North American Camping Report in April, camping outlook has remained strong throughout the first half of the year.

“This year is very different than 2021, and we’re encouraged that people are still turning to camping as a vacation option,” said Whitney Scott, chief marketing officer of Kampgrounds of America. “Even amidst uncertainty from external factors, campers are proving the importance of the activity as they make plans. People are finding ways to camp because it’s a part of their lifestyle.”

While lower gas prices are less of a concern compared to previous months, shifting economic considerations have caused 77% of camping households to adjust their camping plans. Shifts include taking trips closer to home, fewer camping trips, or staying in locations longer. In the past 30 days, 12% said they canceled some of their camping plans.

It is also notable that other travel is also affected by financial concerns, with 35% of campers indicating they have or plan to replace another vacation option with a camping trip in 2022.

“Travelers have multiple factors impacting travel decisions, whether economic or the instability of air travel,” Scott said. “Knowing this, we continue to innovate our offerings to attract that business and provide superior outdoor experiences.”

Amongst the subset of campers who say they will not be camping this year, financial reasons, difficulty finding a site and not having vacation time were the top reasons. Gas prices, which have dropped slightly, fell as a reason for not camping.

The July Monthly Research Report also shared how far in advance campers are booking. Most (20%) indicated that they reserve their campsites three to five months in advance. Similar amounts said they prefer to book one month (18%) or six to twelve months (18%) in advance.
